III.
The Special Mission

The special character and purpose of the University of Wisconsin-Green Bay can be further delineated by the following statements of its particular goals and responsibilities.

The University should offer a focused, institutionwide academic program that is innovative and substantially unique in both its goals and organization, emphasizing interdisciplinary, problem-centered study of man in the environment. To this end:

(a) The University should develop, test, and evaluate new mission-related educational programs and procedures.

(b) The University should strengthen multi-disciplinary and interdisciplinary concentrations which support the on-going academic mission.

(c) The University should develop problem-solving approaches to investigating and learning, especially in the mission-related areas.

(d) The University should offer programs leading to professional certification or equivalent in areas clearly associated with its mission.

(e) The University should provide basic graduate education which grows clearly and directly from the unique organization and goals of the undergraduate programs.

(f) The University should support interchange of ideas and techniques among individuals, the University, and the community to improve the quality of life.

(g) The University should develop appropriate interinstitutional program relationships within the region, while serving the state as a uniquely oriented educational resource.